SITUATIONAL LEADERSHIP

- Situational leadership is a flexible and adaptive leadership style that adapts to the needs of the team, group, or organization. It is not based on the specific skills of the leader; instead, the leader has to modify his or her leadership style to suit the requirements of the group, team, or organization.
- Situational leadership is the model of choice for institutions around the world that want to develop people and workgroups, establish rapport, and bring out the best in their people.

STEPS FOR SITUATIONAL LEADERSHIP

STEP 1 TELLING/INSTRUCTING

STEP 2 SELLING/COACHING

STEP 3 PARTICIPATING

STEP 4 DELEGATING

TELLING/INSTRUCTING

In this style, the leader is dealing with beginners or people with low competence in given tasks. The leader has to lead by doing the following:

- Preparing clear instructions or user manuals.
- Giving clear instructions with checklists.
- Ask testing questions to confirm that instructions are understood correctly. Supervise closely and check regularly.

SELLING/COACHING

In this style, the leader is dealing with people with some competencies, but who lack commitment. The leader has to lead by doing the following:

- Explain clearly the task and what should be done.
- Emphasize the correct execution and what the leader expects.
- Ask for suggestions and ideas on how to alternatively do the task.
- Set an agreement about expected results.
- Give corrections or feedback to encourage specific behaviors.

PARTICIPATING

In this style, the leader is dealing with people who have mastered the tasks and are also committed. The leader has to participate or motivate his group by:

- Listening to the members and working together to find the problem/solutions.
- Collaborating with the members to look for possible solutions.
- Asking for possible solutions and ideas to solve the problem.
- Making collaborative decisions regarding desired outcomes with team members.

1. Clearly describing what tasks need to be done and by whom.
2. Expressing trust and explaining why should the team to work on the task.
3. Providing the team with the necessary resources to do the task.
